Hello. I apologize for the late reply.

I am considering contacting you via snail mail. I find email a bit intimidating. However, after reading the safety tips on this site, I feel that things have changed a lot compared to the past. It seems that there are many scams these days. In the past, you could immediately confirm the physical address of the other person, but now it says to be careful about that as well.

As I mentioned in my profile, I am looking for someone to share stories about their life and mine through pen pals. Personally, I enjoy hearing about other people's lives and experiences.

To briefly introduce myself, I was born in Seoul, the capital of South Korea, and after living in various places within the country for a while, I have been working and living in Seoul ever since. I have a family and a job, and I lead a fairly ordinary life.

When I was young, the most fascinating thing to me was a personal computer, so I was very interested in it. However, these days, I've started investing in American companies as a hobby (it's truly just a hobby—I wouldn't recommend it to others, and I have no intention of suggesting it to you either) and collecting commemorative coins sold by the Bank of Korea. I'm not the type to stick with one hobby for a long time, so I've tried many things but haven't stuck with any of them. I might give up on this one too in a few years.

Can you tell me a little about yourself and your hobbies? I don't visit this site often, so it might take me a while to respond.

Have a good day.
